Abstract

There have always been incessant mysterious events of marvellous nature spreading at all times and in all places. Ordinary people can hardly understand the whys and wherefores; some have become superstitious; some half believe but not quite believe and there are many others who actually do not believe and there are many others who to give supports to whether or not these mysterious events are genuine or sham, providing answers to the many unsolved puzzles that have existed in men. In this article, we use Xu Hengshan's Spiritual Theory to explain the universe in its inception.

Key words : scientific management of mind, unsolved puzzles, spiritual theory, universe inception.

I. Introduction

As verified by scientists and doctors that the three factors that maintain life are sunlight, air and water. A special camera has been invented to take the photo of the outer layer of a living form, which cannot be seen with the naked eye—the invisible 'light'. When animals or plants die, this layer of light cannot be pictured. All living forms with life have 'light'. When the 'light' disappears, 'life' disappears, too. Therefore, wherever there is 'light', there is life. No matter whether they are the invisible vitality or matter with a form, they need 'light'. The vital power in man can be called the 'spirit'. The spirit has light. It is called the spiritual light. It is the natural light of its own vitality and is the sole life to reside in the animal's body with a mind. The matter itself does not have the existence of spiritual life but it needs the light of the matter—the light of the sun, to culture its own life. There have always been incessant mysterious events of marvellous nature spreading at all times and in all places.

In other words, all animals with a mind such as men, the viviparous, oviparous, etc. can move because they have the principle life source that comes from the natural spiritual light and the light of matter ranking second in importance in culturing them. The life of matter, such as the plant or the mineral, does not have the natural light of vitality. Their lives are cultured by the matter light (the sunlight). Therefore, the chief source of energy for lives existing in the universe, be they the invisible vitality

(the spirit) or matter with a form, is light. "Light" is the energy source of life, so how is it formed? At the epoch when the universe was beginning to take shape, all was nebulous and without any guide-lines, 'light' was the first form being given birth to [1]. Was it the spiritual light or the hot light energy of the matter star?

II. The precedent for the spiritual light and the sunlight

At the very beginning before the space in the universe was in full form, all was dark and without definite guidelines. The two poles, the south and the north, emitted both the negative and positive electric waves, each responding with the other at a focus (a centre point) to produce a central magnetic field. After billions and billions of years, the two poles incessantly reacted to the central magnetic field, and in the absence of air or under the hindrance of some factors, an extremely powerful magnetic field was produced in the space. With the time that endured as heaven and earth, that magnetic field with responding power was formed. It slowly sparkled its 'light'. That light could shine, drift and fly at the centre of the magnetic field in the universe that was a vacuum. Had it been the glow of fire of matter, it could not have burnt and light could not been seen under the vacuum condition in the space. It is just like the fluorescent lamp. The tube is vacuum. It gives out light after been reacted upon by the responses of the two poles – the negative and the positive. But in vacuum, the matter light does not exist. The light that first appeared in the universe did not belong to the form of matter. It belonged to the invisible 'spiritual light'.

The spiritual light within the human body the 'potential' that is not seen. But at the nerve-centre point at the mid-point between the two eyebrows it appears. Similarly, when a person dies, what can be seen in the daylight is the 'aura'. But in the night time it can be seen as light [2].

As the central magnetic field was so full of the spiritual lights thus produced, the number of them was uncountable. There were billions of light. If sighted at a distance, their light was similar to the sunlight, but it was actually not the light of the sun. Under the law of nature, where there is light, there is life [3]. The centre of the magnetic field that was surrounded by the spiritual lights so cultured, gave birth to a matter cell in the universe. Just like the spiritual lights, the matter cell received the invisible energy from the two poles and under the culture of the surrounding spiritual lights, it slowly, and, in a very, very long time took the shape of matter with life. It grew and grew until, at a certain degree, its light became so strong that its brightness was stronger than the spiritual lights'. The spiritual lights could no longer stay at their original position but were compelled to leave [4].

III. How was the earth formed?

The space in the universe was originally dark and vast. After the sun had been formed, the universe became bright. The great sun shone brightly. Its light shedded to every corner of the universe, forcing the spiritual light to fly away from its light and to seek residence. After having been shone by the sunlight and having been cultured through a long period of time, the matter cells in the universe were given birth to one after another [5, 6]. The life of the matter cell was cultured by the sunlight, too. Under the theory that where there is light, there is life, the matter cells finally filled the whole universe and this world was gradually formed. The matter that was cultured by the energy of light received more of its culture when it was closer to the source of light. The stars within the solar system, the Jupiter, the Mars, the Venus, the Mercury, the Saturn, the Uranus, the Neptune, the Pluto and the Earth, were closer to the source light. They grew with the velocity of wind; and the rest of the other stars are still growing under the culture of light.

IV. Conclusion

The space in the universe is so vast that people can barely imagine it. It took numberless years to give birth to spiritual lights and then to form the matter cell in the space that was at first without any definite guidelines. Within that period of uncountable number of years and months, degrees by degrees and stages after stages of development had been experienced, causing the universe to own new appearances again and again. From the 'beginning of emptiness' till now, the time that has actually been experienced and the process of development and evolvement can never be comprehended and explored with men's present knowledge and standard of technology.
